MESSAGE FROM CILTM PRESIDENT PROFESSOR TS DR MUHAMMAD ZALY SHAH FCILT

In this issue, I want to talk about something that deeply impacts our daily operations and overall safety—driving safety and defensive driving. As a logistics company, our truck drivers are the backbone of our business. They ensure timely deliveries and keep our clients satisfied. However, they also face multiple risks on the road, which can lead to accidents, endangering lives and causing significant financial losses. So, it's crucial that we prioritize driving safety to protect our most valuable assets—our people and our fleet.

Truck drivers are exposed to various challenges that increase the risk of accidents. Long hours on the road, unpredictable weather conditions, and dealing with other drivers' behaviors all contribute to this risk. The reality is that our drivers often grapple with fatigue due to long-distance travel. Fatigue not only slows reaction times but also impairs judgment, making accidents more likely. When accidents occur, they don't just affect the driver; they impact our company's reputation, our clients, and ultimately our bottom line.

One of the most pressing issues we face is driver fatigue. Long-distance travel wears down even the most experienced drivers, elevating the risk of accidents. Fatigue can result in slower reaction times and poor decision-making. Imagine driving for hours on end, trying to meet tight deadlines while fighting off exhaustion. It's a recipe for disaster. Understanding this, we need to take proactive steps to mitigate these risks by focusing on defensive driving techniques and proper rest.

One effective solution is to implement defensive driving and safety courses. These programs teach drivers how to anticipate potential hazards, manage their speed, and maintain a safe following distance. They also emphasize the importance of taking breaks and recognizing the signs of fatigue. Investing in these courses will equip our drivers with the skills they need to stay safe on the road. Moreover, it demonstrates our commitment to their well-being, which can boost morale and job satisfaction.

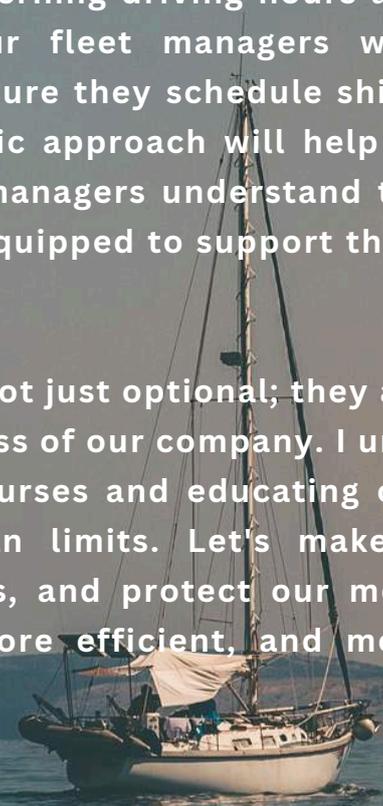

MESSAGE FROM CILTM PRESIDENT
PROFESSOR TS DR MUHAMMAD ZALY
SHAH FCILT

But it's not just about the drivers. Our fleet managers also play a critical role in ensuring safety. They need to understand the laws governing driving hours and the human limits of our drivers. By providing our fleet managers with comprehensive knowledge through training, we can ensure they schedule shifts that allow for adequate rest and recovery. This holistic approach will help us create a safer work environment for everyone. When managers understand the constraints and pressures drivers face, they're better equipped to support them effectively.

In conclusion, driving safety and defensive driving are not just optional; they are essential for the well-being of our drivers and the success of our company. I urge you all to consider implementing defensive driving courses and educating our fleet managers about legal requirements and human limits. Let's make a collective effort to prioritize safety, reduce accidents, and protect our most valuable assets. Together, we can create a safer, more efficient, and more responsible logistics company.

Thank you.
